My Republican friends:

WE GOT OUR BUTTS KICKED!! Not only across the nation but the one that matters is JCC!

I do not know how we motivate and educate the community but we lost a good representative in Congress and it was a big hit to the military (HASC). Those of you that know me a bit are aware that I have been a big fan of Congressman Wittman since I moved here 8 years ago. Election Results below:

All ballots, both those cast early and on Election Day for James City County

Candidate	Votes	Percent
Shannon Taylor	24,108	55.25%
Rob Wittman*Incumbent	19,439	44.55%

But that is history. We have a major challenge for 2027. The document below was written by a friend of mine; please take a few minutes and read it and consider our situation and what we can do to address the upcoming election cycle. The democrats spew anger and vitriol and we shake our heads and laugh at them but THEY WIN! They might have TDS, but we have Cultural Narcisisim (we cannot comprehend that they think and believe differently than we do)

Like each of you I have my ideas and opinions but this is not the communication to go there I forward this to stimulate the strategies for 2027 and I know each of you are leaders, I welcome your comments but more importantly share ideas with the groups in the area, and hopefully unite them into action.

Thank you in advance for making time to read my note and the entire essay by my friend Andy Joppa.

Art Garrison

“A Time to Hate”
(Ecclesiastes 3)
By Andy Joppa

"Hate allows us to keep our guard up, to protect us. When we are facing those who seek nothing but our destruction, our hate reminds us who we are dealing with. When hate is appropriate, then it is not only virtuous, but essential."
Meir Y. Soleveichik

I haven’t written in a while…I hope you’ve noticed. That thought, however, may just be my ego’s optimism. As I stay deeply involved with the health…and future…of America, I try to consider what is missing from the approach used by those on the Right…those that I believe may offer the only hope for saving our nation from going into the dust bin of history.

While I have many disputes with their strategies they, at least, have the same destination as I do…saving America from the onslaught of those who seek only one end…the destruction of America.

Let me speak plainly about what I believe is missing: those of us on the right often lack the resolve needed to confront our opponents. I do not mean mere dislike or rejection, but a deep and sustained opposition that guides our actions until the threat is neutralized. History, in my view, shows that only this level of determination can produce the outcome we seek.

This level of opposition can only be created by a profound hatred of those trying to destroy America and its values. The political Left has harvested their perverse version of that reality for the past few decades. All of the success of their devious scheming has been driven by only one engine…hatred…. hatred of Trump, hatred of America, hatred of the good for being the good. We must learn to fight the coming battles with our version of that same "weapon."

This perspective, that hatred of the negative alternative—rather than the love of the positive ideal—is the true engine of human progress offers for most, a deep and challenging framework for their understanding of history, psychology, and societal evolution. Far from being a mere semantic distinction, shifting the primary driver of human advancement from a passive appreciation of positives to a visceral rejection of negatives, fundamentally alters how we view motivation and collective action.

I remember, many years ago, reading the words of Rabbi Shmuley Boteach in his essay, "Moral People Must Learn How to Hate." Here, in part, is what he wrote. It best explains why I hate…and what I hate.

The good Rabbi wrote;

"I have heard all the arguments repudiating hate. Hatred is evil. It is the cause of all wars. It consumes the soul of he or she who hates. Silly arguments all. Hatred is only evil when it is directed at the good and at the innocent. It is positively Godly when it is directed at cold-blooded killers, motivating us to fight and eradicate them before more people die…."

"…. Hatred is the moral response to those who have gone beyond the pale of decency by committing acts which unweave the basic fabric of civilized living. To encounter evil is to come under the injunction of never showing even a morsel of sympathy lest we weaken our determination to destroy it…."

It was the one line of the Rabbi that most activates my defense of hatred, "Hatred is the moral response to those who have gone beyond the pale of decency by committing acts which unweave the basic fabric of civilized living."

In America, we are being destroyed by those who are doing just that. Do I hate those involved with this form of primitivism? Of course, they leave me no other choice. Do I want them destroyed? Yes... If only figuratively…but destroyed, nevertheless. Loving America is Jamnot enough. You must love America enough to hate those trying to "murder" it.

It is "hate" that has driven the major positive changes in human progress. We hated slavery and, as a result, have pursued freedom. We hated anarchy and have written laws. We hated injustice and then pursued justice. We hated poverty and, therefore, pursued economic well-being. We hated ignorance and have tried to educate. It has not been love of freedom, law, justice, economic success or enlightenment that has driven human action. It has always been the hatred of the negative alternative.

Early legal codes, such as the Code of Hammurabi or the development of English Common Law, were not written because early rulers had a utopian vision of a perfectly harmonious society. They were forged out of a desperate, weary hatred of the bloody, unpredictable reality of tribal vendettas and systemic anarchy. The law is a shield built to keep the hated chaos at bay.

The industrial and economic revolutions were driven by a harsh, unyielding rejection of scarcity, vulnerability, and the grueling nature of agrarian subsistence. The pursuit of wealth is often secondary to the deep-seated fear and hatred of the indignity and suffering associated with absolute poverty.

The systematic push for universal literacy and scientific inquiry was fueled by a battle against the devastating consequences of ignorance—superstition, vulnerability to manipulation, and preventable plagues. “The enlightenment was less a peaceful walk toward light and more a fierce retreat from the dark.”

Hatred, in the sense of a profound, visceral rejection of a condition, introduces the necessary dynamic energy to break social inactivity. As noted, the active dismantling of slavery, anarchy, and systemic ignorance did not occur simply because people daydreamed about better alternatives; it occurred because the current reality became completely intolerable. It became hated. The aversion to the negative state creates an urgent pressure cooker that forces action.

We are now experiencing the loss of what we’ve achieved as a nation by forgetting what we hated to get here. As examples of this idea, I can cite that the American Revolution was fought because of the hatred of British oppression; The Constitution was created as a reflected hatred of tyranny; and the Civil War was fought because of the hatred of slavery.

What happens when “hate” is lost? Currently, freedom is being willingly yielded to the ever-encroaching arm of the vicious mob. Law has become subject to the arbitrary whim of judicial interpretation, creating, often, a near state of anarchy. Justice has been politicized to be little more than vendettas. Education has more to do with indoctrination than minimizing ignorance. Economic choices have yielded to centralized systems that have always failed historically. Without a sustained “hatred” for the negative alternative, politicians and the public are almost casually yielding the benefits that “hate” has driven.

Hate is an evolutionary remnant, like love, designed into us for purpose. That purpose was to give us the motivation…the energy…to overcome obstacles in our path. We developed the emotion of hate to survive. Without that motivator the human response to evil is, all too often, lacking in the intensity needed for success…or survival.

Ecclesiastes 3 offered these words*, "For everything there is a season and a time for every matter under heaven… a time to love, and a time to hate; a time for war, and a time for peace."*

To validate this framework is to recognize that human progress is fundamentally cautionary. We do not build walls because we love the architecture of the wall; we build them because we hate the cold and the threat of the wild. By identifying "hate of the negative" as the primary mover, we strip away romanticized, historical revisionism and reveal the true, gritty mechanics of human survival: "we move forward because the ground behind us is on fire*."*

Now is the time to profoundly hate The Left… If they survive and thrive…America will die. There is little else to understand. Election day, November 3rd, may invalidate or validate my position. If the Right achieves a tsunami of victory, then staying the course is appropriate. If the anti-Americans win a significant victory, then what I suggest is the only choice we will have. We must then fight with the intensity that only hatred can create to protect what they will surely try to take away. The time for platitudes will be over.
