

Supreme Court Backs Trump Policy Requiring Biological Sex on U.S. Passports

By Cole Harrison

For years, everyday Americans have watched in disbelief—and honestly, ‘disbelief’ doesn’t even capture it anymore—as their government forced them to participate in obvious falsehoods. From school boards declaring boys can become girls to military branches lowering standards in the name of “inclusion,” the assault on basic reality has felt relentless. Official government documents—the very papers meant to establish facts—became tools for validating feelings over truth.

But the tide is finally turning. After enduring the Biden administration’s wholesale abandonment of biological reality, Americans who believe in common sense just scored a massive victory at the highest level. The institution that matters most for settling these disputes has spoken, and the message couldn’t be clearer.

From ‘The Post Millennial’:

The Supreme Court has ruled that the Trump administration is allowed to require that the sex listed on a person’s US passport be that of their biological sex. The ruling allows the Trump administration’s rule to go into effect while the case plays out.

The order stated, “Displaying passport holders’ sex at birth no more offends equal protection principles than displaying their country of birth—in both cases, the Government is merely attesting to a historical fact without subjecting anyone to differential treatment.”

Common Sense Prevails at the Supreme Court

This ruling represents far more than a bureaucratic adjustment to passport applications. It’s a resounding affirmation that the federal government’s role is to document facts, not validate identity crises. President Trump wasted no time addressing this madness, signing an executive order on his very first day in office directing agencies to “accurately reflect the holder’s sex” on government identification—with sex properly defined as “an individual’s immutable biological classification as either male or female.”

The contrast with the previous administration couldn’t be starker. Under Biden, the State Department had descended into absolute chaos, allowing passport applicants to select “M,” “F,” or even “X” as their sex marker, regardless of biological reality. No medical documentation required—just feelings. (Yes, really. This was actual U.S. policy.) Foreign governments receiving these fantasy documents must have wondered if America had completely lost its mind.

The Predictable Progressive Outcry

As expected, the three liberal justices—Ketanji Brown Jackson, Sonia Sotomayor, and Elena Kagan—delivered their usual theatrics in dissent. Jackson dramatically claimed the majority had engaged in a “pointless but painful perversion of our equitable discretion.” She accused the Trump administration of being motivated by “bare animus against transgender Americans.”

But here’s what Jackson and her colleagues refuse to acknowledge (spoiler: they never will): requiring accurate biological sex on passports isn’t discrimination—it’s documentation. The Supreme Court’s majority understood this basic distinction, noting that recording someone's biological sex is no different than recording their country of birth. Both are historical facts that don't subject anyone to differential treatment. A Massachusetts federal judge had tried to block Trump's common-sense policy, but the high court swiftly reversed that judicial overreach.

This victory sends a powerful message: the days of forcing Americans to pretend men can become women are numbered. Trump promised to restore sanity to our government, and he's delivering. With the Supreme Court backing biological truth over progressive fantasy, American families can take heart that reality still matters in our nation's capital.

For too long, the radical left has weaponized compassion to assault truth itself. But Thursday's ruling proves that no amount of activist judges or angry dissents can change biological facts. The Supreme Court has spoken—and common sense Americans are winning again. (Finally.)

Key Takeaways

- Supreme Court upholds Trump's requirement for biological sex on passports
- Liberal justices' dissent reveals their disconnect from biological reality
- Trump delivered on Day One promise to restore truth to government
- Common-sense Americans are winning the culture war's crucial battles